Know the Risk Factors

Risk factors are characteristics that make it more likely that someone will consider, attempt or die by suicide. They include:

- Mental Illness
- Substance use disorders
- Feelings of helplessness or hopelessness
- Perceived burden on others
- Close history of suicide
- Recent losses or traumatic events
- Easy access to lethal means
- Lack of supports and access to resources

These factors cannot cause or predict a suicide, but It's important to be aware of:

Know the Warning Signs

Some warning signs may help you to determine if a loved one is at risk for suicide. If you or someone you know exhibits any of these signs, reach out or help them seek help!

- Talking about wanting to die or end their life
- Researching suicide
- Making preparations to end their life
- Expressing hopelessness, helplessness or lack of desire to live
- Changes in someone's "typical" behaviors or activities
- Social isolation or withdrawal

Have the Conversation

These steps can help others to find hope and support:

- Ask – Open the conversation to loved ones about suicide and help remind them it is okay to not feel okay.
- Be There – Being physically and emotionally present can show your support for loved ones.
- Help Them Connect – Inform loved ones about the resources available to help them!

Suicide can impact anyone. Knowledge and empathy can help break down the stigma around suicide.

Be a part of the change!
